Who is Venerable Father Maximus the Confessor ?

Venerable Father Maximus the Confessor (ca. 580-662) was born in the region of Constantinople. A member of the old Byzantine aristocracy, he was well educated and was Imperial Secretary under Emperor Heraclius. Around 614, he became a monk (later abbot) at the monastery of Chrysopolis. During the Persian invasion of the Empire (614), he fled to Africa. From about 640 on, he became the determined opponent of Monothelism, the heresy that Jesus Christ had only one will. Maximus supported the Orthodoxy of Rome on this matter and exclaimed: "I have the faith of the Latins, but the language of the Greeks." He argued for Dyothelitism, the teaching that Jesus Christ possessed two wills (one divine and one human). After Pyrrhus, the Monothelite Patriarch of Constantinople, had declared his defeat in a dispute at Carthage (645), Maximus obtained the heresy's condemnation at several local synods in Africa, and also worked to have it condemned at the Lateran Council of 649. He was brought to Constantinople in 653, pressured to adhere to the Typos of Emperor Constans II. Refusing to do so, he was exiled to Thrace. (Pope St. Martin of Rome was tried around the same time in Constantinople, and thus deposed and exiled to Crimea.) In 661 Maximus again was brought to the imperial capital and questioned; while there, he had his tongue uprooted and his right hand cut off (to prevent him from preaching or writing the true faith), and then was again exiled to the Caucasus, but died shortly thereafter. Ultimately, Maximus was exonerated by the Sixth Ecumenical Council and recognized as a Father of the Church. His feast day is August 13.
